The School of Politics and International Relations has a long history of excellence in research, in undergraduate education and in postgraduate supervision. ANU was the only university in the country to receive a score of 5, denoting an “outstanding performance well above world standards”, for political science in the 2010, 2012 and 2015 Excellence in Research in Australia assessment. In the 2016 rankings of the world’s top 200 universities, ANU was ranked 8th for Politics and International Studies.

Located in the national seat of government, Canberra, ANU is Australia’s premiere research university. Students and researchers in the School enjoy easy access to Australia’s national political institutions.

The School’s undergraduate teaching program is broad, innovative and consistently popular among undergraduates. The School regularly attracts the largest number of undergraduate enrolments within the College. Several staff have won student-driven, University and national awards for their innovative teaching practices.

The School of Politics and International Relations has produced path-breaking work on political parties, public administration, international relations, elections and political behaviour.

Dr Andrew Banfield
Head of School
The School of Politics and International Relations offers a range of undergraduate and postgraduate degree programs, many unique to ANU. Students can specialise in areas ranging from human rights and globalisation, to European and Latin American studies.

DEGREES

Political Science

Bachelor of Arts

Don’t want to limit yourself? Keep every door open with our versatile Bachelor of Arts Program. This is the largest and most popular degree at The Australian National University because it allows you to explore all of the subjects that you love and perhaps discover more that you never knew existed. Whatever you choose to study, this program will keep you way ahead of the pack with transferable world class skills in critical analysis, research, written and oral communication.

Political Science Major (48 units)

Political Science Minor (24 units)

Political Science is the study of human relationships that involve power, rule, or authority. It is about how societies govern themselves and how societies ought to be governed. It is about the political behaviour of individuals and groups that occurs in all societies. It is about those who have political power in society and those who do not. Political Science is a broadly-based discipline offering courses that span a number of sub-fields including political thought, Australian government and public policy, and comparative politics including the study of particular countries or regions.

Bachelor of Political Science

The Bachelor of Political Science is the only degree of its type in Australia offering unparalleled access and connections to the political heartbeat of the nation. The comparative nature of courses means you’ll develop an understanding of different systems of government, using comparative methodology. In this highly structured degree you’ll examine political science theory, public opinion, political economy, government behaviour, systems, principles, and different methods and techniques of political science.

Capitalising on our ranking of number one in Australia and 7th in the world for Politics and International Relations*, the Bachelor of Political Science will provide you with a strong knowledge base of the global government landscape. Our commitment to research led education means that you’ll be taught by world-leading researchers. You’ll also have the opportunity to complete an internship, undertaking a research project for academic credit through the Australian National Internships Program (ANIP).

You’ll graduate with a degree that is globally recognised and attractive to employers, with well-developed skills in research, critical and conceptual thinking and problem solving.

Isabella Jensen-Fielding is in the third year of her Politics, Philosophy and Economics degree.

“I chose the BPPE program because of the foundation and the freedom it provides. Foundational knowledge from compulsory politics, philosophy and economics courses provided me with the stability and confidence required to navigate the early stages of university well. The freedom to choose electives enabled me to build upon my foundation, deviate from the norm and explore courses that have informed my decisions regarding the direction of my future. Looking back, I know that choosing the BPPE program has opened a plethora of opportunities and was certainly the right choice for me.”
Undergraduate Degrees

International Relations

Bachelor of International Relations
Can you see yourself jet-setting the globe with a career in trade, foreign affairs, journalism, international business or research? You have found the right degree. ANU is a leader in the field of International Relations. With our flexible program you can extend your chosen language subject into a major, and have the opportunity to go on exchange or an international/national internship.

International Relations Major
(48 units)
The study of International Relations has traditionally focused upon the (often hostile) engagements between nation-states and/or their diplomatic elites seeking to advance the national interest by war or other means. These are still important themes in the contemporary IR agenda. However, at the beginning of the 21st century analysts and policymakers require a more comprehensive body of knowledge and deeper understanding of the world and how it operates. The International Relations program is designed to introduce students to such knowledge and understanding in regard to both traditional and more recent agendas.

International Relations Minor
(24 units)

Human Rights

Human Rights Major
(48 units)
Courses in this program address the human rights discipline in both theory and practice. It is constructed so as to provide students with a robust understanding of political, legal, historical and philosophical origins and contemporary realities of the human rights field. Completion of this program will equip students with an understanding of key issues in the discipline, such as: the political, philosophical and historical development of ideas concerning human rights; the emergence and role of human rights in international relations; the interplay between human rights theory, law and practice; key contemporary theoretical debates on human rights; and the relationship between human rights and concepts such as social justice and equity.

Human Rights Minor
(24 units)

Bachelor in Politics, Philosophy and Economics

We all know that citizens in some countries have more freedom than citizens in others. But how do you measure freedom? If climate change is a world problem why don’t we do more about it? Should government compensate people who don’t bother to fully insure their homes against natural disaster? Why should those who do insure their homes have to contribute? There are many public policy puzzles and only through using the tools of politics, philosophy and economics can one see the problems from all angles: technical, ethical and practical. ANU’s unique elite PPE degree will provide the student with all the skills needed to understand how to analyse public policy and provides an ideal degree for those wanting careers in the public service, politics, international organisations, policy advisors or simply those who want to understand our political, social and economic worlds. As well as following offerings in the three main disciplines the degree also has a seminar-based course only for BPPE students.

Latin American Studies

Bachelor of Latin American Studies
From the secret language of tango dancers to the intricacies of political change in Cuba, this degree will fly you to Latin America (quite literally, and probably in your fifth semester of study). Latin America’s history is a collision of culture and politics, wealth and poverty. In this course you will study a history of corruption, colonisation and celebration. Off the back of its traumatic history, Latin America is growing economically at breakneck speed and in this course you will move along with it. For aspiring comerciantes and cultural buffs alike, our degree immerses you in a region of extremes.

Latin American Studies Minor
(24 units)

The Latin American Studies program is designed for students interested in the social, political, historical and cultural life of Latin America. It focuses on contemporary Latin America as well as its history and ancient heritage. It also considers the innovative aspects of recent developments, particularly the possibilities for cooperation and tensions between diverse traditions.

Emily La is doing Bachelor of Arts/Bachelor of Laws.

“I knew a degree at ANU would provide me with an excellent foundation to pursue a career in foreign policy and human rights advocacy. The ANU’s reputation for excellence attracts eminent leaders and policymakers whose perspectives have provided me with invaluable insights into international affairs. From being able to attend guest lectures delivered by Nobel laureates and participate in Q&A sessions with career diplomats, I’ve been able to engage with the best and brightest of the foreign policy world – as an undergraduate! ANU lecturers are not only highly regarded academically; they are passionate educators who take unprecedented interest in supporting students’ learning and are keen to involve students in academic research. I currently work as a research assistant on a human trafficking project – an opportunity which has been the highlight of my studies.

With think tanks, government institutions and embassies nearby, opportunities abound for ANU students to obtain practical experience which complements their studies. Studying IR has enabled me to appreciate the interplay between domestic politics and international relations.”

European Studies

Bachelor of European Studies
Can you see yourself bustling to work through the streets of Paris, Glasgow, Munich, London, Madrid or Geneva? If you are interested in the social, political and cultural structure of contemporary Europe – this program is for you. The Bachelor of European Studies focuses on the foundations of modern Europe, bearing in mind its long history and how this has shaped contemporary European societies. It also considers the innovative aspects of recent developments, particularly the possibilities for cooperation and unity as well as the tensions between diverse traditions. You will study a European language and travel to Europe for ‘in-country’ study at a partner institution.

Contemporary Europe Major
(48 units)
Contemporary Europe Minor
(24 units)

The Contemporary Europe program will allow you to integrate diverse interests under one field of enquiry. Studying Contemporary Europe is a perfect way to combine international relations, politics, history, sociology, philosophy, literature and cultural studies, as well as being an ideal accompaniment to those learning European languages.
Honours
The School of Politics and International Relations has a strong Honours program and offers both ANU and non-ANU students the opportunity to complete an Honours year. Honours students in the School of Politics and International Relations are highly valued and the School recognises Honours as a significant, transitional year between undergraduate studies and postgraduate study or employment; Honours prepares the way for high achievement in both.

In the Honours program students have the opportunity to undertake higher level coursework and carry out an independent research project under the guidance of a specialist academic supervisor. Students will take three seminar courses in the first semester, including a core course, Research Training, and two electives. The two electives are chosen from a list of options which normally includes courses in political institutions, public policy, international politics, and political theory. The options will vary from year to year. Students will write an Honours thesis of 17,500 words to be submitted at the end of the year.

Emily Look is a PhD Candidate in Political Science.

“During my undergraduate degree and particularly in my Honours year, I became fascinated by the factors that shape political values and how they might differ across national and cultural contexts. I’m now researching the causes and consequences of support for democracy among young people in Russia, Ukraine, and Belarus.

I came to Canberra after spending a year teaching at my alma mater and working out where would be best for me to start a PhD. The ANU stood out from the start, because of both its excellent international reputation (eighth in the world for Political Science at last count) and the support it offers its research students. From my first day, when I was led into my own office space, I have been provided with every resource necessary for carrying out my research.

While I’m only in my first year of the PhD, I hope to continue in academia. I’ve been encouraged and inspired not only by my supervisor and panel, but also weekly seminars run by department academics and the high-calibre international scholars that the ANU attracts.”

Postgraduate Degrees
Graduate Research
Political Science and International Relations within the College of Arts and Social Sciences is the highest ranked political science department in Australia. Our academic staff are among the best in the world and we attract high calibre visitors from across the globe who enhance and contribute to our research culture. This makes CASS the ideal environment in which to undertake a PhD.

In addition, our location in the national capital provides researchers in politics and policy at ANU access to a wide range of valuable resources. Canberra is where the Parliament is, where the national parties have their headquarters and where the lobbyists come to influence policy. Canberra is home to the federal government and the High Court. The changes are that, whatever research you do on Australian politics and policy, most of the action is going on here in Canberra. The School of Politics and International Relations is also home to world-class experts in other regions, including Europe and Latin America.

We have a large area of expertise and can supervise PhDs in most areas of political science, public administration, public policy, international relations, and some areas of political theory and sociology. The School provides training in research design and methods, to help research students develop their research project with the support of peers and academic advisors.

If you are considering undertaking a PhD in the School of Politics and International Relations you can be sure that the School will provide whatever support it can to enable you to obtain your goals. There are a range of scholarships available to support research students. Additional to scholarships, the School of Politics and International Relations endeavours to support its graduate students in undertaking fieldwork, obtaining further training, and attending conferences in the discipline.

Undergraduate Degrees
With over fifty courses to choose from, the School of Politics and International Relations offers something for everyone. Whether it’s human rights, peace and conflict, political theory, or the politics of Europe, Australia, or Latin America that draws your interest, the School has something for you.

Hayley Pring is an honours student in the School of Politics and International Relations. “My thesis is on how institutional variation among autocratic regimes determines the design of Preferential Trade Agreements. I became interested in trade after working at a free-market think tank in Germany in 2015 and it slowly became my honours topic.

After completing school in Perth I made the decision to come to Canberra to study at ANU, based on its prestige, availability of merit scholarships and program diversity. The opportunities I’ve had have ensured it was the best decision I could have made. With one of the best IR departments in the world, honours at ANU was ideal.

The quality of academic staff is what distinguishes ANU, while they may be conducting research in their own field, their commitment and passion for teaching is what facilitates my own learning. It is the reason the university continues to inspire students.”
This course will teach the basic elements of game theory. It will focus on using the logic of games to make inferences and arguments about political and social behaviour, with readings on collective action, voting, bargaining, repeated interaction, war, and other examples.

POLS2133 International Organisations in World Politics
This course examines the nature and place of international organisations in world politics. Attention is given to why international organisations were formed, how they operate, and what role they play in contemporary international affairs. The course looks at different theoretical approaches to understanding and explaining international organisations. Attention is then turned to a series of institutional groupings. The course concludes by taking up the interactions of international organisations with nongovernmental actors as well as how new configurations of global power are changing the international organisations landscape.

POLS3001 Foreign Policy Analysis: Understanding Global and Australian Foreign Policy Decision-Making
This course proceeds from the assumption that the decision by a government to engage in foreign war is the most serious that a government can take. Australia’s international history will be examined, presenting an occasion for examining its understandings and practices of international politics.

POLS3017 International Relations Theory
This subject focuses on the different ways in which theorists have attempted to explain and understand different aspects of international relations. It begins by introducing students to the nature and purpose of theory, as well as the major theoretical concepts employed by IR scholars and policymakers.

POLS3025 Contemporary Political Analysis
This course asks students a basic question: how do you know what you know? Contemporary Political Analysis is a third-year course, divided into two sections: Theory and Methods. It will propel students beyond what they know to an understanding of how they know it.

POLS3028 Researching and Writing Human Rights
This course aims to develop students’ capacities in researching and writing in the field of human rights. It will assist students to undertake a research project and to present their work on human rights in a form appropriate to the subject matter, purpose and audience.

EURO2003 European Union: Policies, Institutions and Challenges
The European Union is the most advanced form of supranational governance on the planet, yet it is widely tolerated rather than loved. Students completing this course will have an understanding of what the European Union is; how its institutions inter-relate and function; and the role of Euroscepticism in contemporary Europe.

EURO3001 Uniting Europe: history, politics, theory
The European Union is the most advanced supranational polity on the planet, but how did it get that way? Was it the Grand Design of far-sighted visionaries, or merely an unintended consequence of past decisions and policies? This course poses such questions and introduces students to the history and theory of European integration.

HIST2230 Latin America: Conquest and Colonization
This course provides an overview of the conquest and colonisation of Latin America. It does so in the context of the major theoretical perspectives and controversies surrounding this process. Topics dealt with will include the nature of the Aztecs and the Incas, motivations for conquest, and perspectives on colonisation.

POLS2095 Politics and Development in Latin America
It has been said that Latin America pre-dates foreign political trends of the twentieth century. This course provides an overview of the politics of development in five Latin American countries – Mexico, Bolivia, Argentina, Venezuela and Chile. It will explore key economic development models and their political and social consequences in the region, over time, highlighting critical issues in contemporary Latin American Democracies and their development.

POLS2010 Refugees: Displacement and Exclusion in the Twentieth and Twenty-First Centuries
This course addresses three questions. Who is a refugee? What compels refugees to leave their homes? And how should governments and communities respond to them? Through concepts and case studies the course will illuminate the dynamics of political belonging and exclusion in international relations.

POLS2012 The Political Philosophy of Deception
Much of the Western political-philosophical tradition is based on deception. Political philosophers/theorists such as Plato, Machiavelli, and Strauss have argued that unless certain truths about reality and politics are hidden from the public, society will fall into ruin. This course examines how and why deception has become central to politics.

POLS2014 Media Politics: Political Leaders, Media Moguls, Journalists and Audiences
This course introduces the complex set of interactions between politics and the media. It examines the function, roles and strategies of individual journalists and media corporations in their relationships with politicians, political institutions and citizens. It explores the implications of the media as a powerful political institution in its own right.

POLS2101 Elections, Political Behaviour and Public Opinion in Australia
Why do Australians vote the way they do? Why are young people more likely to support minor parties? What would happen if voting were not compulsory? This course will examine political behaviour and public opinion in Australia to investigate these questions and more.

POLS2114 Australian Political Institutions
Australia is one of the world’s oldest liberal democracies. This course examines the Australian political system, providing students with an overview of the cleavages that characterize Australia and the institutions that attempt to manage them. The course concentrates on formal political institutions and electoral competition.

POLS2025 Politics in Britain
This course examines British politics since 1945 through the lens of ideological change and electoral competition. It will cover ideological shifts of the major parties, the rise of “third parties”, the challenge posed by separatist nationalist parties in Scotland and Northern Ireland, and the UK’s relationship with the European Union.

POLS2063 Contemporary Political Theory
Political theory is marked by its diversity and contested nature. In this course we examine the development of contemporary political theory. Beginning with Renaissance humanism and the Scottish enlightenment, the course also covers the gloom of Frankfurt School dialectics, and the chic of French post-structuralism.

POLS2044 Global Social Movements
This course will examine the changing role of social movements in bringing about change in a globalising world. From the 1960s so-called ‘new social movements’, including women’s, lesbian and gay and environmental movements, transformed the social and political landscape of western societies. These movements promoted new forms of organisation, tactics and ideas such as the politics of oppression, identity and culture, empowerment and post-materialism.

POLS2092 American Democracies and their Consequences
How and why has democracy spread across the world? Is democracy important for citizens? How can international actors help encourage the spread of democracy? What does the history of democracy say about Australian history? This course will teach students about various aspects of democracy in a comparative and international context.

POLS2027 U.S. Politics
This course provides an introduction to U.S. political behaviour and institutions. We will discuss the design and rationale for the U.S. political system and the implications it has for both citizen involvement and governing. Through the course we will make comparisons between the U.S. system and other democracies around the world.
POL3029
Sharing Power: Federalism in Comparative Perspective
In this course, we will explore the logic of vertical power-sharing and what drives it from two very different theoretical perspectives: rational choice (American) and historical institutionalism (European). By doing so, we will examine one of the most dynamic research areas at the intersection of political science and economics. The workshop process will provide students with the unique opportunity to design (reform) the Australian Federation.

POL3030
Contemporary Politics of Brazil
Brazil is the sixth largest economy in the world. Yet despite numerous signs of advanced development, the country is still beset with widespread poverty, social exclusion, and violence. The purpose of this course is to take students from a beginner’s to a more advanced understanding of Brazilian society, and the political dynamics of this amazing diverse country.

POL3031
Comparative Judicial Politics
Research course will provide an overview of the major debates in comparative judicial politics. The primary goal is to familiarise students with principal questions and methodological approaches to the study of a major subfield in political science. This is not a course in constitutional law. Rather, the focus of this class will be on studying the law and courts as a political institution and judges as political actors.

POL3033
Environment, Human Security and Conflict
This course examines the linkages between environmental conflicts and human security. The global rise in conflicts associated with control of natural resources (water, food, energy resources), has continued the tensions between traditional notions of security and human-centred security concerns. Students will conduct in-depth analyses of cases of environmental conflicts around the world in order to identify the key actors, their projected values and interests, as well as the implications of different alternatives from a human security perspective.

POL3034
Comparative Political Parties
This course examines the roles of political parties in democracies by reviewing the emergence, functions, activities, and the future of political parties. The focus of this course is on a comparative analysis of parties; however, on many occasions it will draw on specific country experiences, including Australia, to illustrate particular topics. Additionally, the course will reflect on how and why political party experiences in post-industrial democracies may (or may not) be applied to newer democracies.

POL3xxx
International Terrorism
This course examines the principal issues associated with modern international terrorism and efforts to counter it. The objective of the course is to provide the student with a broad understanding of international terrorism, and to enhance the ability to engage knowledgeably in discussion and debate on the subject. The course considers a wide range of questions in order to provide students with a deeper understanding of the threat of terrorism today.

Claire Gunton is in the final year of a Bachelor of International Relations. Claire was part of the Washington Internship Program in 2016 working in the office of Congressman Tom Rooney.

“The Washington Internship Program was the highlight of my time at the ANU. The internship is an unparalleled opportunity to live and work in the heart of US politics. There is nothing quite like stepping out your front door and walking past the Supreme Court. Working in the office of Congressman Tom Rooney, I had the opportunity to work closely with legislative staff, attend committee hearings, and prepare memos on a wide range of topical issues such as the spread of the Zika virus, and security vetting of Syrian refugees.

The internship program also has a strong research component, undertaking a self-directed research project has been challenging, but also incredibly rewarding. It has provided me with an opportunity to consolidate the research and analysis skills developed over the course of my international relations degree.”

Internships
ANIP
Australian National Internships Program
The Australian National Internships Program provides students from any discipline with the opportunity to undertake a significant research project within a workplace, for academic credit towards their degree. Most placements are in Canberra at national institutions, peak industry bodies, public policy focused NGOs, or international organisations, such as foreign embassies. In addition, SPIR provides an opportunity to undertake an internship in Taiwan as part of ANIP.

POLS3022
Washington DC Internship
The Washington Internship consists of a six-week internship in the United States Congress during January and February each year. During their time in Washington, students will begin work on a research project to be completed at ANU during the first semester.

Postgraduate
POLS8001
Globalisation: Theories, Issues, Debates
This course explores the different frameworks by which globalisation has been understood and debated. It zeros in on the issues that affect contemporary and future global actors such as civil society and multinational corporations.

POLS8002
Globalisation: the Interaction of Economics and Politics
This course introduces students to how economics and politics have interacted during two centuries of globalisation. By the end of this course, students should have a good understanding of the economic forces driving globalisation, and principal debates in the literature on globalisation.

POLS8004
Postgraduate Training in Politics and Policy: Research Methods
This course is designed for postgraduate students in politics, public policy and international relations (students from other social sciences may take the course with the agreement of their supervisors and course convenors). It will introduce various techniques that doctoral students might need to adopt in the course of their PhD research.

EURO8003
The European Union: Regional Integration in Comparative Perspective
This Master’s level course addresses issues relating to the challenges and implications of European integration. By examining case studies in the fields of law and regulation, human rights, trade and the environment, common policing, security policy and immigration, students will gain interdisciplinary insights into the process of regional integration.

Fancy doing research at the Australian Federal Parliament, working for a member of Congress in Washington D.C., or being part of a vibrant student society? The School of Politics and International Relations offers fantastic opportunities to gain practical experience and build networks.

Australian National Internships Program

The Australian National Internships Program (ANIP) gives Australian and international undergraduate and postgraduate students an opportunity to work at the heart of Australian policy and politics. The elite program arranges 13 week research-oriented internships at a variety of Canberra locations. Interns develop career and research skills while building professional networks that can give them an advantage in a competitive employment market.

ANIP is the only program that offers Australian Commonwealth Parliamentary Internships. In addition, the program offers a range of placement options including the Australian Public Service, the ACT Legislative Assembly, the ACT Public Service, non-governmental organisations and lobby groups, think-tanks and Embassies. Through ANIP, the school also offers an opportunity to undertake an internship in Taiwan.

As an Intern, you will undertake a research project for which you will receive academic credit. Depending on the program, Interns will write a 8,000 – 12,000 word research report. In addition, Interns attend weekly workshops focused on research methods and public policy.

Washington Internship

The Washington Internship program gives students a unique opportunity to network with some of the most powerful people in American politics.

The six-week internships in the United States Congress take place in January and February and are available to ANU undergraduate students. Interns work in either the office of a member of Congress or the office of a congressional committee. During their internships, students start a research project which they complete during their first semester. The internship offers you the opportunity to develop a strong background in American politics and the opportunity to experience political life in Washington DC. You will pursue an advanced program of study and research on a specialised aspect of American Government, politics, and public policy.

During your internship placement, you will also be invited to attend several functions to add to the Washington experience. These include functions or briefings coordinated through the Congressional liaison office at the Australian Embassy and the US State Department.

Admission to this course is highly competitive as there are only six places available each year.

International Relations Society

The Australian National University’s International Relations Society is one of the largest student-run organisations at ANU. The Society’s members include ANU students, staff and many from beyond the ANU community. Some student organisations are centred on particular degrees or specialisations, but here the subject matter is all that counts – you only need to be interested in the world around you to be a member of the Society!

The Society is honoured to have Professor the Hon Gareth Evans AC QC, one of Australia’s longest serving Foreign Ministers as patron. Professor Evans has devoted his life to foreign affairs and international relations and has been Chancellor of the Australian National University since 2010. The Society was founded with three main aims: to promote the academic study of International Relations and Politics; to facilitate the interaction of International Relations Students with each other; and to give a social setting for those studying International Relations to further the enjoyment of study and allow them to interact with future colleagues and employers. The Society advances these aims mainly through its events: lectures, social events, careers fairs and embassy visits.

PPE Society

The Politics, Philosophy and Economics (PPE) Society at the ANU was formed with an aim to support students studying in the field and also provide an outlet for ANU students to explore topics and issues that engage the different disciplines together and individually. The Society has had great success in delivering help with administrative concerns while also organising academic and social with leading experts and providing a platform for students studying PPE or interested in the disciplines to meet fellow students. PPE is becoming one of the more popular areas of study at the ANU and we have had great success connecting the staff in the field with the students at various stages of their studies. We have also been able to foster an environment of peer learning having organised multiple programs where younger students have been able to connect and learn from older students through academic support and through advice on the different options available and their experiences at the ANU. The PPE Society is a great way to get to meet other students interested in the field.

The School of Politics and International Relations is home to several leading national research centres including the ANU Centre for European Studies, the Australian National Centre for Latin American Studies, the Centre for the Study of Australian Politics, and the Australian Centre for Federalism. The centres are hubs of expertise, bringing together leading thinkers, and connecting with the wider community.

ANU Centre for European Studies

The ANU Centre for European Studies (ANUCES) has been established to underscore the University-wide commitment to European studies. ANUCES is an initiative involving six ANU Colleges (Arts and Social Sciences, Law, Business and Economics, Asia and the Pacific, and Medicine, Biology and Environment, and Engineering & Computer Science).

It focuses the talents of hundreds of researchers, teachers and students working on Europe on a single site. Its purpose is to create synergies, promote interdisciplinary dialogue, and generate collaborative research projects at home and abroad.

It is the hub for Europe at ANU and is a special initiative of the European Commission and ANU. The ANU Centre for European Studies takes over the role formerly played by the National Europe Centre. It is funded jointly by ANU and the European Commission.

The ANU Centre for European Studies hosts a successful public lecture and seminar series to offer the academic and wider Canberra community a regular forum for debate on Europe. Our public events program also involves joint activities with the Diplomatic Community.

Australian National Centre for Latin American Studies

The Australian National Centre for Latin American Studies (ANCLAS) exists to develop research and teaching in Latin American Studies, particularly in the fields of the social sciences and humanities, business and economics. ANCLAS aims to promote mutual interest and exchange between Australian and Latin American scholars and to raise broader public awareness and understanding of Latin America in Australia.

ANCLAS hosts a regular seminar series which includes sponsored visits by Latin Americanists from elsewhere in Australia and overseas. These seminars provide a forum for those working in the field to come together to present and discuss their work. In addition, ANCLAS sponsors various research projects which bring together Australian and international scholars.

ANCLAS is situated at the Australian National University as a Centre within the College of Arts and Social Sciences, hosted in the School of Politics and International Relations. The ANCLAS Advisory Board includes members of the academic, diplomatic and business communities.

The Australia and New Zealand School of Government

The Australia and New Zealand School of Government (ANZSOG) is recognised globally as a leading provider of executive-level education for the public sector. The ANU is a major partner of ANZSOG, which undertakes research of national importance, residential executive development, postgraduate supervision in SPIR and engagement with governments and public sector organisations.

ANZSOG runs annual conferences, roundtables and workshops and commissions research projects of national significance. ANZSOG also maintains an ambitious publication program producing research monographs, conference proceedings, occasional papers and manuals for practitioners. Over 50 titles have been published through ANU press on diverse topics of public policy and public management.

Professor John Wanna is the ANZSOG foundation chair at ANU; he oversees research projects and supervises PhDs in public policy; provides specialist media commentary and is the National Research Director for ANZSOG.

Centre for the Study of Australian Politics

The Centre is the University’s newest site for those interested in Australian politics. Recently established in the School of Politics and International Relations, the Centre promotes greater public interest in the structure of political debate in Australia.

The Centre provides fresh intellectual analysis of the trends behind the headline news, drawing on the sharpest minds that ANU can muster. Those interested in examining the big ideas driving the way politics is practised, debated and analysed turn to the Centre for the latest academic research from ANU scholars on Australian politics.

The Centre brings together the best analysts studying the developing character of national politics, including those best placed to identify what is internationally distinctive and interesting about the way that politics is conducted in Australia. Political competition is at its best when it is a contest of ideas and the Centre helps as a new broker of ideas in the study of Australian politics.

Australian Centre for Federalism

The Australian Centre for Federalism was formed in 2012 to re-establish ANU as a leading academic institution for the study of comparative federalism, subnational and local politics, and multi-level governance.

Federal systems are diverse, varying in design, purpose, and in practice, if these varying characteristics matter. It is because of the effects on policy outcomes ranging from the protection of citizenship rights, to social and human development, to environmental protection, and the regulation of industry and natural resources.

The centre aims to bring new debates to the study of federalism both in Australia and outside—framed within a fresh comparative approach. The current centralizing trend in Australian federalism stands in sharp contrast to other regions around the world currently pursuing diversity in policy. For scholars interested in the power of local governments from Brazil to Germany, to indigenous politics in Canada and Australia, or, the challenges of multi-level governance and territorial conflict in Europe, this is the centre to showcase your research and ideas and promote debate.

The School of Politics and International Relations is home to academic experts in Australian politics, international relations, comparative politics, human rights, political theory, Europe, Latin America, and much more. Our staff have been recognised for teaching excellence with a range of student-led, University, and national teaching awards. Many staff have won prestigious national and international research grants. Meet the academic staff who teach the diverse classes on offer, supervise research students, and carry out path-breaking research.

OUR PEOPLE

Dr Andrew Banfield
Head of School
Undergraduate Convenor, Politics
BA (McMaster), MA (McMaster), PhD (Calgary)
Research Interests: Political institutions, comparative politics, and Australian politics.
Andrew Banfield’s research primarily focuses on political institutions, particularly legislative assemblies and Supreme Courts. His current research interests centre around comparative judicial careers in Westminster-derived countries, specifically focussing on Supreme Courts. The research asks about the career paths (where do judges come from), why do they leave the job, and post-retirement activities. Other research interests include a long standing interest in the role of Supreme Courts and the development of public policy, with a particular focus on ‘moral’ issues like euthanasia and same-sex marriage. Dr Banfield comes to ANU from the Department of Political Science at the University of Calgary, Canada.

Dr Katrine Beauregard
Lecturer
MSc in Political Science (Université de Montréal), PhD in Political Science (University of Calgary)
Research Interests: Comparative politics, political behaviour, gender and politics, and political methodology.
Katrine Beauregard joined the School of Politics and International Relations in January 2015. Her work focuses on political behaviour and the factors that explain differences among citizens. After completing a master thesis in Montréal on gender differences in political interests among teenagers, she moved to Calgary to pursue a Ph.D. Her Ph.D dissertation investigated how political institutions can provide incentives and barriers that affect citizens’ political participation differently according to their gender. Part of this dissertation has been published in the European Journal of Political Research in an article that demonstrates that electoral systems play an important role in understanding gender gaps in political participation.
Dr Beauregard’s current projects focus on extending her dissertation work on the effects of political institutions on political behaviour by investigating how institutions can be used to include marginalized groups in the political process.

Dr April Biccum

Research Interests: Post-colonial international relations, empire, and global citizenship.
April Biccum, Canadian born, received an MA in Critical theory and Ph.D. in Politics and International Relations from Nottingham University. Her research interests historically have been centred around bringing postcolonial theory closer to the study of politics and IR, specifically through an engagement with International Development. Dr Biccum’s theoretical grounding in post-colonial theory has led her to a wider fascination with the concept of empire, not simply what empire is and whether it can effectively be deployed as a category of analysis to describe our contemporary world, but what is at stake in the revival of ‘empire’; per se and what it denotes about the foundational crisis in the narrative(s) of modernity. Current substantive projects also involve the politics of Global Education and Global Citizenship.

Dr Justin Bruner
Lecturer
BA (UC Berkeley), PhD (UC Irvine)
Research interests: formal methods (especially game theory), political and social philosophy, social epistemology, experimental economics.
Justin Bruner joined the School of Politics and International Relations in January 2015. Dr Bruner was previously a postdoctoral research fellow in the School of Philosophy at ANU and received his PhD in Philosophy from the University of California Irvine. Dr Bruner utilizes game theory and experimental methods to explore a variety of issues in political philosophy such as social contract formation and the evolution of discriminatory norms. He is also interested in decision making and information pooling within groups, formal models of communication, and low-rationality models of human behavior. Some of his publications have appeared inPolitics, Philosophy and Economics, Philosophy of Science, and Synthese.

Research Interests: Democratisation, elections, post-election disputes, Executive-legislative relations, comparative constitutional design.
Svitlana Chernykh joined the School of Politics and International Relations in September 2014. She received her PhD in 2011 from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. Prior to coming to ANU, she was a Postdoctoral Research Fellow in Coalition Presidentialism at the University of Oxford (2011–2014), a Junior Research Fellow at St Antony’s College (2011–2014) and a Senior Researcher and Project Manager of the Comparative Constitutions Project at the Cline Centre for Democracy, University of Illinois (2008–2011). Her research focuses on democratization, comparative political institutions (parties, constitutions, elections), and executive-legislative relations. Her work has appeared in journals such as Comparative Political Studies, Journal of theoretical Politics, and Political Science, public administration, public policy, and methods. Keith Dowding has published extensively on political power, freedom, rights, equality, responsibility, explanation in political science, rational choice methods, on the British civil service, prime ministers, ministerial selection and de-selection, attitudes to public service quality, and policy agendas in Australia. His most recent books are The Philosophy and Methods of Political Science (2016), The Selection of Ministers Around the World (2015) Exits, Voices and Social Investment: Citizens’ Responses to Public Services (2012) and Accounting for Ministers: The Hiring and Firing of Ministers in British Government 1945–2007 (2012). He edited the Journal of Theoretical Politics for 16 years, is Associate Editor of Research and Politics, and series editor of Routledge Research on Social and Political Elites. His other topics of interest include the development of online Voting Advice Applications and related issues of political representation. Before coming to the ANU Patrick Dumont held positions at the Université catholique de Louvain in Belgium and at the University of Luxembourg.
